Special Call for Papers - Religious Life and Synodality

Review for Religious, a peer-reviewed journal dedicated to religious life in the Catholic Church, is pleased to announce a call for papers on synodality and religious life. While we offer a few ideas below for authors to consider, we welcome submissions on any aspect of religious life and synodality.

Authors may consider synodality within religious life: what are some of the ways religious might deepen their own practices that are already cohesive with the themes of the synthesis report from the 2023 Synod? What issues within the current landscape of religious life might benefit from a more synodal approach?

Authors may also consider the contribution religious may make to the wider synodal efforts. How can religious further the suggestions from the 2023 Synod, especially to the “proposals” from the 2023 synthesis document? What resources are unique to religious life that may assist the People of God in their “journeying together,” and how might these be made useful for the wider church?

Submitting Articles

Submissions to Review for Religious are typically between 2,000 and 6,000 words, although other lengths will be considered. Please remove any references to your identity, as your submission will undergo double-blind peer review. Articles may be submitted at this link; questions can be directed to editor@reviewforreligious.com.
